Dear Mac,

So the bright little boy of three - or was it five - to whom I gave an incubator and fertile duck eggs, and taught him how to incubate and candle them; the toddler who then gave his mothers visitors intelligent explanations of the progress of the embryos and brought them to maturity, is now graduating law school! Great!

Lil and I are happy for your happiness, and we certainly hope he is as good with the law and clients (to say nothing of judges) as he was with those eggs and the incubator!

We hope, too, that as he begins his career it is not in association with the kimds of professional ethics and morality with which I've been living for some yars. Not good for the victims and not good for the impressionable, whose lives and futures are still being formed.

Our best to you all on this joyous occasion.

Sincerely,

Harold
